PREFACE.

The writing of this doctoral thesis has been assisted and encouraged by many people to whom I gratefully express my thanks:

To Mr R.A.K. Mason for permission to undertake the research on his work, and for interviews and the opportunity to inspect certain MSS; to Mrs A.P. Young (widow of the late A.R.D. Fairburn) for permission to undertake the research on her husband's work; to Mr Denis Glover, trustee of the Fairburn and Cresswell papers, and Mr Ormond Wilson, trustee of the Cresswell papers, for permission to use the Alexander Turnbull Library collections of these, and for their advice, recollections and hospitality; to Mrs Helen Hofmann, Mrs Honey Haig, Messrs Frank Sargeson, Roderick Finlayson and Clifton Firth for access to MSS material by the poets in their possession; to Miss Olive Johnson and Mr Jim Traue, the bibliographers of Fairburn and Mason, and to the Librarians and staff of the University libraries of Auckland, Massey, and Victoria, the Auckland, Palmerston North and Christchurch Public Libraries, and the Alexander Turnbull Library and General Assembly Library, for their cooperation in helping me find relevant material; to the Headmasters of the Auckland Grammar School and Christ's College, Christchurch, for information on the three poets' education; to Professor S. Musgrove and the staff of the Department of English at the University of Auckland, particularly of course Dr Allen Curnow, the supervisor of this thesis, and Drs C.K. Stead and W.H. Pearson, and Messrs C.D. Doyle and Kendrick Smithyman, and to Professors R.M. Chapman, Keith Sinclair and E.M. Blaiklock, all for their willingly-given advice, knowledge and opinions on the research; and at Massey University to Professor W.H. Oliver, Professor R.G. Frean and my colleagues in the Department of English, for their encouragement and interest.

Financial assistance for the research came from a University Research Scholarship from the University of Auckland in 1961 and 1962, and from February to August, 1963, from a Research Fellowship from the University Grants Committee. Some research in August, 1962 was done with the assistance of money from the G.E. Farrand Fund, drawn by permission of Professor Musgrove and the Registrar of the University of Auckland.

I must gratefully acknowledge the assistance of Mrs Mina McKenzie and Mrs May Needham in typing drafts of some sections of the work, and especially of Mrs Muriel Moultrie of Palmerston North in her typing of the final stencils. Finally, and most personally, I have valued the encouragement and interest shown (and often, away from Auckland, the hospitality given) by many friends, often students themselves, who have helped this work to its completion. And the help of my wife, my mother and my late father, and my wife's parents has been of continual value, both moral and practical.
