Copyright Statement

The digital copy of this thesis is protected by the Copyright Act 1994 (New Zealand).

This thesis may be consulted by you, provided you comply with the provisions of the Act and the following conditions of use:

- Any use you make of these documents or images must be for research or private study purposes only, and you may not make them available to any other person.
- Authors control the copyright of their thesis. You will recognise the author's right to be identified as the author of this thesis, and due acknowledgement will be made to the author where appropriate.
- You will obtain the author's permission before publishing any material from their thesis.

To request permissions please use the Feedback form on our webpage. http://researchspace.auckland.ac.nz/feedback

General copyright and disclaimer

In addition to the above conditions, authors give their consent for the digital copy of their work to be used subject to the conditions specified on the Library Thesis Consent Form.
Identity, Tradition and Globalism
in post-Cultural Revolution
Chinese feature films

Yung Adam Lam

A thesis
submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Chinese Studies

The University of Auckland

2000
ABSTRACT

After the Cultural Revolution officially ended in 1977, China began its reforms from 1978. Although the initial goal of the reforms was to improve the nation's economy, changes soon took place across other fields ranging from politics to culture, from society to the legal system. These changes throughout the 1980s and 1990s had a significant impact on the development of Chinese film. Contemporary Chinese films reflect these changes either directly or indirectly.

This thesis studies the development of film in post-Cultural Revolution China to the mid-1990s. The thesis argues that Chinese film experienced a shift of cultural identity from being subject to Chinese tradition to submitting to transnational globalism. The causes of this shift were a combination of China’s own reform process and international cultural and financial involvement in the Chinese film industry.

In light of some Western cultural theories, such as structuralism, post-structuralism (including deconstruction), psycho-analysis and postmodernism, this thesis examines a series of acclaimed Chinese directors and films. Many of these directors and films are internationally well known either for their cinematic achievements or for the political controversies about their films. They are seen as representative, especially when contemporary Chinese film is assessed from a cross-cultural, global perspective.

In a new millennium Chinese cultural policies on film production and censorship are changing. This thesis summarizes how the Chinese film industry in the last two decades has responded to, and from time to time accelerated the country’s modernization, commercialization and internationalisation.
CONTENTS

Abstract ........................................................................................................................................ iii

Introduction .................................................................................................................................. 1
  0.1 Preamble ................................................................................................................................. 1
  0.2 Objectives .............................................................................................................................. 4
  0.3 Methodology .......................................................................................................................... 12
  0.4 Terminology .......................................................................................................................... 15

Chapter One
What Is Identity ............................................................................................................................ 19
  1.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................................... 19
  1.2 Film vs. dianying .................................................................................................................. 21
  1.3 Filmic signification ................................................................................................................. 28
  1.4 Cultural identity vs. symbolic order ....................................................................................... 35
  1.5 The cultural identity of film .................................................................................................. 39

Chapter Two
Chinese Feature Films Subject to the Traditional Chinese Symbolic Order .......... 43
  2.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................................... 43
  2.2 Traditional Chinese values in Communist China ............................................................... 44
  2.3 The revolutions did not take place ...................................................................................... 50
  2.4 Film identified with traditional Chinese performing arts .................................................... 56
  2.5 Film as a vehicle for doctrine ............................................................................................... 60
  2.6 Chinese narrative tradition in contemporary Chinese films ............................................. 64
  2.7 Chinese operatic tradition and film ..................................................................................... 70
  2.8 Chinese films aimed for the Chinese market ....................................................................... 72

Chapter Three
Xie Jin and Ling Zifeng: Third-Generation Directors in the Contemporary Chinese Film Industry ................................................................................................................................. 77
  3.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................................... 77
  3.2 A legend created by Legend of Tianyun Mountain .............................................................. 79
3.3 Hibiscus Town: sexual politics rather than politics ........................................ 85
3.4 The debate on the “Xie Jin Model” ........................................................................ 90
3.5 Dramatization and cinematic achievement of Hibiscus Town ............................. 94
3.6 The Last Aristocrats and Xie Jin’s promoting strategies .................................. 99
3.7 Ling Zifeng’s search of traditional Chinese values ............................................... 101

CHAPTER FOUR

Two Wus in Two Directions and the Woman Director Huang Shuqin .................. 106
4.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................... 106
4.2 Wu Tianming’s Old Well and the achievement of “the foolish old man” .......... 108
4.3 Wu Yigong’s Evening Rain and traditional Chinese poetic strategy .............. 116
4.4 Wu Yigong’s My Memories of Old Beijing – a nostalgic poem .................. 122
4.5 Huang Shuqin’s feminist awareness in Woman, Demon, Human ................. 126
4.6 Achievements and contribution of fourth generation directors ......................... 131

CHAPTER FIVE

Chinese Feature Films Subject to the Global Symbolic Order ................................. 135
5.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................... 135
5.2 Alienation from tradition and poetic misreading of “root-searching” ................. 136
5.3 Overseas success of the fifth generation and importation of postmodernity ....... 143
5.4 Hyperrealism, post-realism and other realisms in contemporary Chinese films ............................................................... 150
5.5 A fatally strategic development ........................................................................... 155

CHAPTER SIX

Chen Kaige and His Success by Surprise .................................................................. 161
6.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................... 161
6.2 The Yellow Earth and its international triumph .............................................. 164
6.3 The debate on The Yellow Earth ...................................................................... 168
6.4 Achievements of The Yellow Earth .................................................................. 175
6.5 Chen Kaige’s philosophical search in Life on a String .................................... 181
6.6 Farewell My Concubine as Chen Kaige’s turning point ................................. 188
6.7 Chen Kaige’s portrayal of homosexuality ......................................................... 192
6.8 Behind and beyond the concubine ...................................................................... 197
6.9 Temptress Moon: a “yellow earth” story without yellow earth ...................... 202
CHAPTER SEVEN
Zhang Yimou and His Use of Multi-Interpretable Signs .......................................................... 209
7.1 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 209
7.2 A director's personal style established ........................................................................ 211
7.3 Ceremonial scenes and narrative strategy in Red Sorghum .................................... 214
7.4 Chineseness for the international market .................................................................. 220
7.5 The Oedipus complex in Judou .................................................................................. 226
7.6 The functions of ceremonial scenes in Zhang Yimou's trilogy ................................. 233
7.7 The Story of Qiuju and its resistance to the global-cultural influence ...................... 242

CHAPTER EIGHT
Tian Zhuangzhuang – Politics and Politicization of Films ................................................. 251
8.1 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 251
8.2 Two minority films by Tian Zhuangzhuang ................................................................. 252
8.3 "Making films for the next century" .............................................................................. 258
8.4 Narrative structure of The Blue Kite ........................................................................... 261
8.5 Politics in The Blue Kite .............................................................................................. 266
8.6 Politics around The Blue Kite ....................................................................................... 270
8.7 Achievement of The Blue Kite ..................................................................................... 275

CHAPTER NINE
Those Who Are Called the Sixth Generation ................................................................. 279
9.1 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 279
9.2 Zhang Yuan and Beijing Bastards ................................................................................ 281
9.3 Guan Hu and Dirt .......................................................................................................... 288
9.4 Is East Palace, West Palace a Chinese film? ................................................................. 293

CHAPTER TEN
Huang Jianxin, Sun Zhou and Jiang Wen – Those Beyond Generations .................. 301
10.1 Introduction .................................................................................................................. 301
10.2 Huang Jianxin's Black Cannon Incident ................................................................. 303
10.3 Black Cannon Incident's differences with other fifth-generation films ................. 306
10.4 Huang Jianxin's Back to Back, Face to Face ............................................................ 312
10.5 Sun Zhou's The True Hearted ..................................................................................... 318
10.6 A Chinese answer to global-culturalism ................................................................. 322
10.7 Jiang Wen's In the Heat of the Sun .................................................. 327
10.8 From mission to expression ............................................................. 332

A Conclusion By any Other Name .................................................................. 341

11.1 From tradition ................................................................. 341
11.2 To globalism ................................................................. 344
11.3 The shifting of identity ....................................................... 347
11.4 To conclude ................................................................. 349

Appendix I Narrative Focalization in Sima Qian's Shi ji ...................... 351

Filmography .................................................................................................. 353

  Feature Films (Mainland Chinese Filmmakers) by Year of Release ........ 353
  Feature Films (Mainland Chinese Filmmakers) by English Title ............ 369
  Other Films and TV Productions ......................................................... 374

Selected Bibliography .................................................................................. 376

  In English ......................................................... 376
  In Chinese ......................................................... 382